CHAPTER X.—Continued

One night it happened that he found himself walking along the street at the back of Potheringy Mansions and, looking up, noticed a bright light burning behind the green blind in an upper room. Mr. Ingle's apartment was very easily located. There was a narrow passage to identify the height; the lumber room where the light showed was four windows from the freescap.

Elk was with him, and to that enthusiastic man he confided his intentions.

"He'll start to squeal about police persecution," suggested Elk.

Undeterred, Jim went up in the elevator, though the man in charge discouraged him.

"I don't think Mr. Jackson is at home," he said. (This was the name by which Ingle was known). "A gentleman called an hour ago and knocked twice but got no answer."

"Maybe I can knock louder," suggested Jim.

But ring and knock as he did, he had no answer. Yet, as he listened at the letter-box aperture, to make certain that the bell was ringing, he could have sworn he heard a stealthy footsteps inside. Why was he hiding?

There was, of course, the possibility that the man was engaged in some new piece of rogueship. But from his experience of swindlers, Jim Carlton knew that they were never fearful when they were planning a coup.

The landing was deserted, and he could wait without attracting to himself the suspicion of the lift man. Again he stooped and listened, and now he heard a sound which puzzled him—a whirling like the rapid turning of a ratchet. He had heard that noise before somewhere, and yet he could not locate or diagnose the sound. It came very faintly as through a closed door.

He saw the ascending light of the elevator and walked to the gate. The car passed to the next floor to discharge its passenger, and then came down to his level.

"Couldn't make him hear, I suppose, sir?" asked the elevator man, with the satisfaction of one whose dire prophecy has been realized. "He won't see anybody these days. Why, he doesn't even come out for his meals."

"He has a servant, hasn't he?"

"Only a char," said the lift man disparagingly, as they sank slowly down the well. "Used to have two, but one of them is dead." He told the story of Mrs. Gibbins. "The other comes every morning; doesn't stay more than an hour; does a bit of shopping and goes away for the day. I think Mr. Jackson is going in for something unusual," he added as they reached the ground floor and he pulled back the gates.

"What do you mean by 'something unusual'?"

The man scratched his head.

"I don't know exactly. About four days ago a man came here with a long black box—the sort of thing that they use for carrying films—"

Films!

Now Jim Carlton understood. This was the sound he had heard; the whir of a cinematograph projector!

"He took it up and left it. I asked him if Mr. Jackson was taking on film work, but he said nothing—the man who brought it, I mean. Of course, if I knew for certain that he had any celluloid stored on the premises, I'd have to report it. Those things are not allowed in the building."

Jim listened without hearing. He was dumfounded by the discovery. Every man has his secret weakness, but though he had credited Mr. Arthur Ingle with many peculiarities, he had never suspected him of a passion for the screen.

Elk was waiting outside, the stub of a cigar between his teeth, a large, unfurled umbrella in his hand, and in a few words Jim told him what he had learned.

"Pitchers!" said Elk, shaking his head. "Never thought he would lower himself to that! Querer thing how these crooks sort of run to lawlessness one way or the other. I knew a man, the cleverest safebreaker in Europe, who'd risk a lagging to get a game of ping-pong! There was another fellow named Moses who had the finest long-firm business in England—"

"Let us go around and look at the back of the house again," Jim interrupted the reminiscences ruthlessly.

The bright light was showing again, clear through the dark green blinds, but even as he looked it was extinguished, but when his eyes became accustomed to the darkness he could see the reflected glow of another light. It was in this room then that Mr. Ingle was engaged in his new hobby.

Jim looked naturally at the freescap. There was a wall to be scaled or, easier perhaps, a door into the courtyard of the building might be opened with one of his keys. But the door needed no forcing; it was unlocked and gave easy entry to a stone-paved yard, whence a flight of iron stairs led up to the roof. An iron bar was fastened across the stairs at the bottom, for what purpose was not clear, since it was positively not aroused the inmates and blankets at the foot of the bed. Yet only on the wireless. I shall have sible to get either over or beneath it.

"Maybe it's to keep it airtight," suggested Elk, or to trip up the fellows who are not burnt to death. Going up?"

Jim nodded, and Inspector Elk followed him from landing to landing until they came level with the floor on which Mr. Ingle's flat was situated. Without a word, the man swung himself over the rail and, balancing precariously upon the narrow ledge of stone, felt forward and gripped the nearest window sill. Progress in front of the windows was an easy matter to one with his nervous, was in a crouching position, where he had to depend for his life upon a fine sense of balance that the danger lay. Elk watched him anxiously as he moved nearer and nearer to the window, flattening himself against the wall and edging forward inch by inch, in this peculiar fashion he came sidling to the window from behind which came the ceaseless rattle of the projector.

The moment he reached his objective Jim knew that his effort had been in vain. Behind blind and window he could see the small projector at work, was dazzled by the flicker of the light, and Arthur Ingle showed clearly in the glow thrown back from the invisible screen. He was turning the handle, his eyes staring at the picture which was projecting, and the first thing the detective noticed was that Mr. Ingle was in need of a barber, for his face was covered with a ragged white stubble and his gray hair was long and unkempt.

But what was the picture he was viewing so intently? Jim screwed his head round, but on the left side of the window the blind ran flush with the sash. There was nothing to do but to make his way back, and noiselessly he edged toward the fire ladder.

He had not gone more than halfway before he had a shock. He felt a stone yield beneath his feet, the edge broke off and fell into the courtyard below. It might be rotten piece, he argued, but stepped more gingerly. If the parapet gave under his weight while he was traversing a wall space nothing could save him from death; but he did not allow his mind to dwell upon this aspect of the adventure.

He had reached the window nearest to the iron stairs and was feeling cautiously along with his feet when, without warning, the narrow path beneath him crumbled, and he managed to grip the wooden window and in another second was hanging with his legs in space. He heard Elk's agitated whisper, saw the elderly detective thrust up the crook of his umbrella, but knew that this was beyond his reach.

There was only one hope. Taking off his soft felt he put his hand inside and drove straight at the glass of the window. The shock of the blow almost dislodged him, but clearing off the broken edge of glass, he put a grip on the window sash and drew himself up. A second pane was broken in the same way and, reaching in, with some difficulty he turned the window catch and pushed up the sash. In another second he was in a room. He stopped to listen.

The smashing of his glasses evidently not aroused the inmates and he passed out the news to the agitated Elk.

"I don't know whose flat it is," he whispered. "Meet me at the front of the building."

Tiptoeing across the room, he felt for the light and turned it on. He was in a small bedroom, where he evidently not received the attention of a housemaid for a very considerable time, for dust lay thick upon the furniture and upon the folded blankets at the foot of the bed. Yet the room was handsomely furnished, the general furnishing of Ingle's and in a style that harmonized with apartment. Evidently this was one of the rooms which he had not visited.

He opened the door carefully. The dining hall was deserted, and the lumber room came the careless clatter-click of the projector.

Should he risk being discovered and satisfy his curiosity? It was almost worth while. As he debated the point, the telephone, which was in the dining room, rang noisily, and the door back into the room pulled the door close behind him. He heard the snap of the button as Ingle turned on the lights.

Issues Of Early Farmer's Almanac Lucky In Weather Forecast

The Christian Science Monitor says Isaiah Thomas, early printer of the Farmer's Almanac, was asked by one of his printer's devils what he should put after "July 13": no provision having been made. Thomas, giving little thought to the question replied hurriedly, "Anything." Which accounts for the Almanac of a late 18th century year carrying after its July 13 date, much to the amusement of the populace, "Rain, hail, and snow."

But, stranger than fiction, it did rain, hail and snow on July 13 of that year, giving the Almanac's sales a much deserved boost.

Land Army Popular

Girls Are Making Good On Forestry Work In England

Mrs. Lindsay Scott, organizing secretary, West Suffolk Land Army, says of "land girls": "They have made a great success in the county. All through the bitter winter, 100 girls on forestry work at Culford Camp buck their job. Many farmers say that they are as good as any man, the most grudging say 'nearly as good.' Justin Brooke, who farms 1,200 acres, employs 40 girls, hopes to double them, says: 'I wouldn't be without them, and intend to build bungalows and social hostel for them.' They include ex-mannequin, florist, parson's daughter, grandmother of 60.

Illicit Trapping

Taking Of Fur-Bearing Animals Out Of Season

Northern Ontario is infested with an organization or ring engaged in one of the most despicable of law transgressions... the taking of fur-bearing animals which enjoy protection for one purpose, conservation to prevent extermination... and heavy fines, in some instances accompanied by jail terms, have failed to compel observance of regulations.

While trappers, Indians and white men, are responsible for illegal trapping, the greatest liability rests upon those who provide a market for the illicit fur, and in the majority of cases, encourage the transgression of law.—North Bay Nugget.

Australia Is Ready

Private Home Assured For Any Number Of British Children

Australia has informed the British government that thousands of Britons can be accommodated in the Commonwealth of Australia and as far as British children are concerned a private home has been assured for every child that is sent. Citizens in Melbourne have already offered homes for 18,000 children and more offers are coming in.

Importance Of Timing

An anti-aircraft shell fired at an enemy plane 20,000 feet in the air (a not unusual altitude) will take about 10 seconds to reach its mark. A single second's miscalculation would cause the shell to explode futilely 1,000 feet above or below the intended target.

Field Marshal Earl Cavan, commander of the British army which went to the rescue of the Italians in the first Great War, has removed ribbons of Italian decorations given him at that time.

Caring For Soldiers

Red Cross Hospital Visitors' Committees Operate In Britain

One of the services provided overseas by the Canadian Red Cross Society for the comfort of Canadian troops is the Hospital Visitors' Committee. Members of this committee, mostly Canadian women now resident in England, are assigned to hospitals throughout the Old Country to look after the comfort of every Canadian soldier admitted. The Hospital Visitor reports on his needs to the Soldiers' Comforts Committee of the Canadian Red Cross in London and a parcel is despatched immediately. If the patient is unable to do so himself, the Visitor writes to his relatives in Canada, keeping them informed of his progress.

The Overseas Advisory Committee of the society has accepted the very generous offer of a lovely Worcester home for ten convalescent officers. The donor, Mrs. Bond, will bear the cost of operation, estimated at $3,000.

Zig-Zag Clocks

Used On Ship To Help Dodge Enemy Submarines

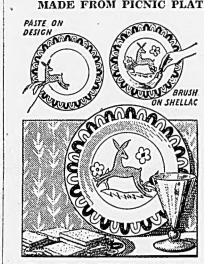

British merchant ships all carry "zig-zag" clocks to help them avoid enemy U-boats. It was explained at a Ministry of Shipping inquiry by David Nicholl, marine superintendent of the Union Castle Line.

Nicholl said the instrument, which worked like an alarm clock, was set to ring at regular intervals, and the bell warned the helmsman steering a zig-zag course that it was time to change course.

The inquiry was into the loss of the 7,016-ton motor schooner Rother Castle which struck a reef off the west coast of Scotland in January and broke her back.

HOME SERVICE

COLORFUL SERVING DISH MADE FROM PICNIC PLATE

Clean Easily With Damp Cloth

Perfect for Summer refreshments—these brightly decorated serving plates! And you can make them yourself of picnic plates and scraps of bright paper.

The prancing deer is light blue surrounded by gay flowers and the border is of alternating light and dark blue borders.

For the horseshoes you have a printed pattern which you trace onto stout wrapping paper and cut out. Using the wrapping paper pattern, cut out 16 horseshoes of light blue and 16 of dark blue. In the same way you trace off and cut out the designs for the deer and flowers.

Now, after giving your plate a coat of shellac, paste the design in place and then give the plate 3 more coats. You'll have a smart and practical plate you can clean with a damp cloth.

Just as easily you make plates using clever geometric designs, pretty flowers.

To Be Expected

Nazi Prisoners Show Their Cowardice When Subjected To Bombs

True, and perhaps instructive. A traveller in a convoy carrying evacuated soldiers to a British port was asked how he stood the constant aerial bombing to which the ships were subjected. "It would have been all right," he said, "if it hadn't been for the German prisoners. We had to take frequent stops to silence them, or they would have quite unnerved us."—London Spectator.

We never yet saw anything brief hauled out of a brief case.

Australia's War Effort

Newsprint And Gasoline Rationed And Waste Material Salvaged

Australia is lightening her economic belt in an effort to help win the war.

An order has gone out from the commonwealth government to eliminate waste. The States having been asked to encourage and supervise the salvaging of such waste as household refuse, paper, cardboard, bottles, scrap metal, rags and rubber.

The Victoria Red Cross is already receiving $125 ($350) daily from the sale of waste. States governments will control a corps of collectors.

Effective July 1, rationing of newsprint cut the size of Australian newspapers. Metropolitan dailies and large weeklies are limited to 35 per cent. of their 1938-39 tonnage, other papers 25 to 30 per cent.

This rationing is expected to save 11,000,000 ($2,800,000) annually in sterling exchange.

Gasoline will be rationed in August with private automobiles allowed eight to 18 gallons monthly according to horsepower and commercial vehicles 20 gallons. These trucks will be grouped so as to reduce aggregate mileage and each group will receive special rations.

Regulations Broadened

War Certificates May Now Be Bought By Certain Groups

In response to requests by a number of patriotic groups in Canada, the war savings committee of the Bank of Canada announced a broadening of regulations covering issue of war savings certificates whereby the certificates will be issuable to certain specific groups wishing to act in concert. Previously certificates have been issued only to individuals.

Incorporated or unincorporated bodies organized for the purpose of carrying on objects of national, municipal, patriotic, religious, educational, charitable, professional, social or sporting activities "without pecuniary gain to their members," will be allowed to purchase not more than $500 worth of certificates. Service clubs and labor and fraternal organizations, excepting those acting primarily as insurance or benefit societies, are also included.

Smallest Electric Motor

Swiss Watchmaker Has Set It In Pearl Tie Pin

Exhibits at the Swiss National Exhibition at Zurich last summer included the smallest electric motor in the world. It weighed 16 gram, and was constructed by M. Fernand Huguenin, a watchmaker, of La Tour de Peilz, near Vevey.

M. Huguenin has now constructed an even smaller motor, weighing only .06 gram (less than 1/200th of an ounce). He had to use very powerful magnifying glasses in constructing his masterpiece, which runs perfectly on current supplied by a pocket battery. The motor has been made into a tie pin and set in a pearl cut in two and hollowed out.—London Times.

War Affects Old Bailey

The Old Bailey is going to look dreary in wartime. The custom of presenting to the judge and court officials small bouquets of cottage flowers and strewn the court with aromatic herbs is to be suspended "for duration." Only twice has the custom been suspended; the last time it was in the World War.

MINISTER OUTLINES REGISTRATION PLAN ON NATIONAL SCALE

A nation-wide plan for the registration of every man and woman in Canada above the age of 16 years by Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of National War Services. National registration is a first step in carrying out the objects of the National Resources Mobilization Act.

Four days will be set aside about August 14 for registration purposes.

Jules Castonguay, Chief Electoral Officer for Canada, has been appointed Chief Registrar, by order-in-council, to supervise national registration. A provincial organization will be set up in each province with the Chief Justice of that province or a judge appointed by him as the head.

To carry out actual registration members of the House of Commons are asked to name a registrar in the constituency they represent. These in turn will appoint two men in each subdivision of the riding to carry out details of the plan. This plan is patterned along the lines followed in taking the vote in a Dominion election, with the exception that registration will be compulsory, during the four days set aside by the Minister. Each subdivision will be divided in four areas will register on a given day.

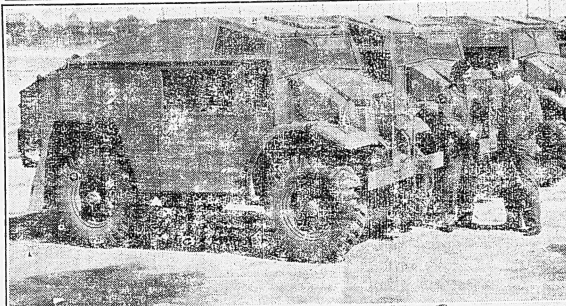

Rates of pay for registration officials will approximate those given to election officials as will the pay of registration officers. Registrars and deputy registrars will be allowed necessary travelling expenses.

An appeal to make registration a national effort was sent out by Hon. J. G. Gardiner and the services of voluntary workers and organizations solicited.

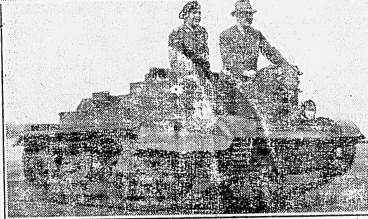

Gifts Accepted

Acting on behalf of the Government, Hon. C. D. Howe announced the acceptance of two yachts, the "Nautilus" and the "Leopatra", placed at the disposal of the disposal of the government by Basil D. Hobbs, of Montreal, and Mrs. F. G. Blackstock, of Toronto, respectively. A valuable radio telephone set and other electrical equipment donated by C. A. Gentles was also accepted for use by the Royal Canadian Navy.

Canada to Supply Army with Universal Carriers

UNIVERSAL machine gun carriers will soon be added to the list of army vehicles made in Canada for the fighting forces at home and overseas. These are equipped with caterpillar treads and are very maneuverable and speedy. They are armoured against small arms fire and will carry three Bren guns, or can be used to carry ammunition, wireless sets and other necessary equipment. They will be produced in the Windsor plant of Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited, which has been selected as the most suitable for the production of this vehicle. In the lower photograph, Mr. Wallace R. Campbell, president of the Canadian Ford organization, is shown with Lieut.-Col. D. C. Warren, officer commanding the Essex Tank Battalion, Windsor, inspecting one of the Universal carriers. Other army vehicles now made in the Ford plant in

Windsor include the powerful four-wheel drive gun tractor pictured above. These and other types of military vehicles are rolling off the assembly line of the Canadian Ford plant which is supplying nearly 10,000 units to the Canadian army and another 25,000 units for military purposes to other Empire governments. The plant is now being expanded by a $700,000 addition to provide facilities for building Universal carriers and to increase production of other types of military vehicles.

Oppose entry of More Hutterites

Lethbridge, July 15
Proposal to bring to Canada a colony of Hutterites living in Vilshofen, England, has met with prompt opposition here. The Canadian Legion has already wired John H. Blackmore, M. P. at Ottawa, and Senator W. A. Buchanan, advising them of the opposition of the returned men to such a move. Other organizations are expected to act similarly.

The Hutterites are not Canadian citizens. They were given special privileges by the federal authorities when they crossed the line from South Dakota to Canada to settle, and they largely speak the German language. They live in colonies and are strict pacifists.

Jersey Dairy Herds May Be Killed For Nazi Rations

Brampton, Ont. July 15 (CP) Fear the famous livestock herds of Jersey will be slaughtered to feed hungry Nazi soldiers was expressed today by Duncan O. Bull, internationally known Jersey breeder, commenting on a cable he received from the tiny island now under German occupation.

Although press reports have told of evacuation of both people and livestock from Jersey, Bull received a cable last week from Jersey Cattle Society which read: "Farming community decided to remain in Jersey and no cattle evacuated from island."
